Question No. 1

CLO: 1

Marks 30

You are Maria Herrera and have been recently promoted to the position of director of financial analysis for a medium-sized consumer goods firm. During your first few weeks on the job, you took the time to have lunch with each of your subordinates to try to get to know them better. You have 12 direct reports who are junior and senior financial analysts who support different product lines. Susan Epstein, one of the female financial analysts you had lunch with, made the following statement: "I'm so glad we finally have a woman in charge. Now, hopefully things will get better around here." You pressed Epstein to elaborate, but she clammed up. She indicated that she didn't want to unnecessarily bias you and that the problems were pretty self-evident. In fact, Epstein was surprised that you didn't know what she was talking about and jokingly mentioned that perhaps you should spend some time undercover, observing her group and their interactions with others. You spoke with your supervisor and the former director who had been promoted and had volunteered to be on call if you had any questions. Neither man knew of any diversity-related issues in your group. In fact, your supervisor's response was, "We've got a lot of problems, but fortunately that's not one of them."

In the context of DEI, answer the following questions.

- a) Based on Susan Epstein's comments, what potential gender-related diversity or inclusion issues might exist in the financial analysis department? Explain how such issues can affect employee morale and performance. (15)
- b) As Maria Herrera, how should you professionally and ethically respond to an implicit diversity concern raised by a subordinate when senior management denies the existence of such issues? (15)

Question No. 2

Marks 20

- a) What is Management by Objectives (MBO)? Describe the key steps involved in an MBO program and discuss its advantages and potential limitations in modern organizations. (10)
- b) Explain the major types of plans used by organizations, including strategic vs. operational plans, long-term vs. short-term plans, and specific vs. directional plans. (10)

Question No. 3	CLO: 2	Marks 20
-----------------------	---------------	-----------------

- a) Differentiate between structured and unstructured problems. How do these problem types lead to programmed and nonprogrammed decisions? Support your answer with suitable organizational examples. (10)
- b) Explain the three decision-making conditions—certainty, risk, and uncertainty. How do these conditions influence the quality and approach of managerial decision making? (10)

Question No. 4	CLO: 3	Marks: 30
-----------------------	---------------	------------------

- a) Define leadership and explain the major sources of leader power. Discuss how the effective use of power contributes to successful leadership. (15)
- b) Differentiate between transactional and transformational leadership. Explain how transformational leadership influences employee motivation and organizational performance. (15)
